What I liked most about Queen's Play was the author's gradual and subtle crafting of Lymond's growing consciousness of leadership. It was very well handled. In this book, which is the second of the Lymond chronicles (16th century), Francis Crawford (Master of Lymond) was a little less intellectually scintillating than he was in The Game of Kings, but still dazzling

Queens' Play is the second of Dorothy Dunnnett's Lymond Chronicles. A few weeks ago I talked about how much I loved the first in the series, The Game of Kings, and I'm pleased to report that I enjoyed this one too, though maybe not quite as much. I never know how to write about the second book in a series as it's very difficult to discuss it without giving away some of the things that ...

This is the second in the author's "legendary" (according to the cover) Lymond Chronicles, of which I read the first, The Game of Kings, in 2017. In this instalment our hero is engaged by Mary of Guise to travel incognito to the court of Henri II of France - where her seven-year-old daughter Mary, Queen of Scots, is being brought up and educated to be a wife for the Dauphin (and hence ...

Queens' Play which was first published in 1964 is the second in Dorothy Dunnett's Lymond Chronicles and as I recall, I enjoyed it even more than the first one. These books aren't really suitable for bedtime reading - well not for me anyway because they require more concentration than I can usually summon up by then.
